5. My curriculum should be based on each individual child's current interests. - this does not mean that I have to make lesson every day based on individual interests but we need to be mindful of their interests as we are developing our curriculum so that they will be engaged with the learning.

7. Media in general delivers fair and accurate accounts of events around the country. - I mostly agree that if we get our news stories from different outlets and are able to see both side of the story then we can see the fair and accurate account of the events. It is not just the job of the media to tell us and we just accept blindly .

3. All learning programs should accommodate all children with special needs. - I think that while that all the children in learning programs needs to be accommodated I also believe that there are certain programs that are better suited and developed for students with special needs. As an early learning provider it is my job to work along with the family to see if my program fits the needs of the child and family or if they should seek a different program.

4. Some extended family members may confuse children, so they should not have a voice in raising or educating the child. - Not my call. Its up to the family

Point of view

My family culture, my religious culture, my education, my husband's culture, my husband's religious culture, where I have lived, and media influence my point of view.

The more we learn the more our point of view changes. It is amazing to see how people change their opinions as they age and learn new things and meet new people.
